Download: text, pdf.[Therapeutic problems with glucocorticoids]. The increasing number of reports of adverse effects, including osteoporosis, cataracts, and peptic ulcer, the occurrence of which may take years to manifest, suggests that glucocorticoids are not benign in relation to long-term administration. There is a need for controlled trials of the different non- or low doses for the treatment of chronic diseases such as rheumatic disorders. Special attention should be paid to the administration of glucocorticoids in the aged, especially those on combination with other medication such as diuretics. An artist's illustration of the rocky exoplanet TRAPPIST-1g, also known as the TRAPPIST-1h planet, as seen by the Hubble Space Telescope. Credit: NASA/Goddard An international team of astronomers has used Hubble Space Telescope observations to identify three new planets orbiting nearby Sun-like stars with a combined mass equivalent to that of the planet Jupiter. The planets orbit each of the seven stars in a group known as the TRAPPIST-1 system. The observations were made with the Fine Guidance Sensor, which measures how much the guide stars in the telescope (called the Fine Guidance Sensor Guide Stars) move when the telescope moves. The team searched for planets with periods greater than 12 days and low-amplitude signals, which would indicate the presence of very small planets. This is the first time a planet with such properties has been detected around a star with a temperature similar to our Sun. "One of the remarkable features of this discovery is that the planets are so close to the host star," said Nikku Madhusudhan, of the University of Cambridge, in the United Kingdom, and co-author of the paper. "This makes them difficult to detect and should be taken into account when planning future observations of this system." Kepler's discoveries of a large population of low-mass, Earth-size planets around Sun-like stars opened up a new frontier in planet search. The newfound planets around TRAPPIST-1 are all smaller than Earth and only a few of them are larger than Neptune. "Since TRAPPIST-1 is close to Earth in size and age, it shows us what a nearby Sun-like star system might look like when its star was also similar to the Sun, and therefore provides a benchmark for the types of planets that could exist
